Why get involved?

ScienceWriters is a unique event, and 2024 is a special year for the conference. This year, the Science Communicators of North Carolina will join the usual partners, the Council for the Advancement of Science Writers and the National Association of Science Writers, in organizing the meeting. #SciWri24 will inform, inspire, equip and engage science journalists and science communicators as they tell the important science and technology stories of the 21st century—from climate change to agricultural innovation to infectious disease and artificial intelligence.

SCIENCEWRITERS™

About #SciWri24

Who's coming?

A vibrant community of 600+ science writers from around the country. Science journalists and communicators cover every field of science, environment, technology, and biomedicine—online, in newspapers and magazines, books, documentaries, multimedia, and podcasts.

Most are members of the National Association of Science Writers. An estimated 20% of NASW's journalist members also belong to the Association of Health Care Journalists or the Society of Environmental Journalists, reflecting the ways science writers look for stories across topics such as biomedicine and climate.

November 8–11, 2024

Most science journalists today work on a freelance basis, finding stories and pitching them to editors. Both activities happen at ScienceWriters conferences. Shown below are proportions from self-identifications from attendee surveys at recent conferences.

About #SciWri24

What's on the program?

Science

- ❖ CASW's New Horizons in Science program will focus on emerging issues and research, informing ongoing coverage and new stories
- ❖ Lunch with a Scientist and local tours and field trips will give writers a close-up of the science of the Research Triangle and beyond

Craft and Networking

- ❖ NASW's professional development sessions, conference workshops, and mentoring and meetup events build essential skills and connections
- ❖ Receptions, breaks, and offsite events enable professional networking and provide chances for sponsors, exhibitors, and meeting partners to connect with attendees.

Guidelines

- ❖ All supported activities will be labeled as such, and sponsors will be prominently recognized. CASW and SCONC recognize that sponsored activities add value to the conference and will work to ensure that sponsors' activities, presence, and support are appreciated by attendees.
- ❖ Sponsor representatives will have the same access to attendees online, in the conference app, and in person, as do other attendees.
- ❖ Attendees will decide what personal and professional information to share with sponsors and hosts. Organizers do not share attendee info.
- ❖ Sponsor representatives, including support staff, will be required to abide by NASW's Conference and Meeting Code of Conduct.
- ❖ Any activities listed in the conference program must be open to all attendees.

Additional guidelines on access and accessibility, attention to dietary needs, transportation, and liability insurance apply to sponsor-organized and off-site events.

The Council for the Advancement of Science Writing, a 501(c)(3) nonprofit, welcomes support from hosts and sponsors whose values align with our historical mission to improve the quality and quantity of science news reaching the public. Sponsorship income helps offset the cost of the conference science program, provide hospitality and travel grants, and cover expenses such as planning, space rental, technology, and transportation.

ScienceWriters sponsorship guidelines recognize the independent, non-sponsored nature of conference events organized by our partner, the National Association of Science Writers, and the journalistic context of the joint NASW-CASW conference. NASW does not accept funding from outside sources.

Science Communicators of North Carolina, also a 501(c)(3) nonprofit, is proud to partner with CASW and NASW to produce ScienceWriters2024. Sponsors may choose to assign their contributions to SCONC.

If funds remain after all conference expenses are settled, they will be divided among the conference partners and used for ongoing activities in support of science journalism.
